"Now our troubles are over," said Anastasios Stavropoulos, of Xilocastro, Greece, as he happily examined his new mare delivered through Greek War Relief Association's "Telegraph an Animal" campaign. "Now we can work our fields again."

Anastasios' new mare was sent to him by his brother, Alex Stavros, 2524 Yale Avenue, Seattle, Washington. To Anastasios, the new animal means the difference between a starvation diet and adequate food. And it means something else -- the return of his spirit of independence and self-respect. Henceforth, his future and the future of his family is assured.

The mare was one of more than 11,800 cattle, valued in excess of $1,500,000, shipped to needy Greek farmers via GWRA's facilities. However, this animal campaign was temporarily suspended on September 15th.

"Because of the hazards of winter shipping, we had to close our campaign until spring," explains George Xanthaky,
